Focus of Observation :

Observing another teacher's assessment methods

Reflection :

I wanted to look at how another teacher uses their assessment methods in this lesson.

The teacher collected homework at the start of the class, students without homework were given a note on TYRO. The teacher had a stamp to mark any work that had been seen by her with.

The teacher was asking a mixture of higher and lower order questions throughout the lesson on freeze & thaw action. This ensured that the students were all keeping up and that they understood what she has just taught before she moved on to the next thing.

At the end of the lesson she asked a series of questions to students at random to test if they has been paying attention in that lesson.

Overall I like this teachers use of assessment methods, particularly the end of lesson questions as it was a clear indicator as to whether the class was a success or not.
